Col. Everett C. Quincy Bicknell, of Hingham, after the installation service, while addressing the lodge, turned to the worshipful master. John McKay, and in a very complimentary speech, presented him as a token of appreciation for the services rendered during the past year, the past master's jewel, which was received with a profusion of thanks. No sooner had this ceremony been dispensed with than Past Master George W. Sampson, of Lexington, arose and approaching Col. Benton, presented the certificate of honorary membership. In doing so he expressed the many kind fe-lings of the lodge towards the recipient, who was made a Mason in the same hall several years ago when Mr. Sampson was in the chair. Mr. Sampson said the honorary membership was conferred because the members believed it well deserved and although Col. Benton was not a resident member, his interest in the welfare of the lodge had been with it ever since he received his degreen there. When Col. Benton arose to his feet to respond to the presentation he was given an avation by the members, and his remarks showed his sincere appreciation of the distinction. He warmly thanked the members of the lodge, and expressed himself as having been honored once before by the members in a manner which he will never forget, and that was when he was allowed to take his degrees. Col. Benton took his seat and at that juncture the door of the lodge opened and Representative Thomas L. Creeley entered the room bearing the banner. In a few words he presented it to the lodge as a gift from Col. Benton, and the members were literally taken off their feet. No one was able to respond for some seconds, when Mr. Bicknell, at the request of the worshipful master, made a fitting reply.

The banner is of silk and about four feet by three upon a standard eight feet high, with the square and compass at the top. Upon the front of the banner is a picture in oil of Simon W. Robinson, who was a 33d degree Mason, and for whom the lodge was named in 1870. On the reverse side are the words "Simon W. Robinson Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Lexington, Mass." The work is finely executed and the gift is one of the handsomest of the kind to be found in the state.

In 1851 he received the 33d degree from the supreme council at Boston.

For these valuable and important Masonic services, as well as having through a long life sustained the character of an honest and upright man, living to the good old age of seventy-six years, the brethren concluded that no better or more honorable name could be adopted than the Simon W. ing presses, and was the subject of an article in the Enterprise some few weeks ago.

It is understood a large extra force will be added to the Arlington shop next week, and work will be resumed with considerable energy. Last week a pair of 40 ton rolls for rolling the brass used for the blanket was added to the equipment, and this will aid materially in getting the product completed and ready for shipment. A fifty horse power electric motor has also been recently installed.

George S. Heath, of Arlington Heights, formerly foreman of the shop, has been promoted to the position of superintendent to succeed Mr. Severy, and he has already begun his labors in the new position. Mr. Heath is a well known inventor and recently had patented a disc bearing, which he claims to be an improvement of ball bearings for heavy machines. The change about will in no degree lessen the work of Mr. Severy for he has a number of other enterprises in process of construction, all of them being the product of his own inventive mind. While this change will relieve him from his official connection with the company which bears his name, he is one of the large stockholders in the concern.

Anniversary, Wednesday - Abra- Train Stops in Front of Man on the Track.

> Station Agent Charles H. Duffy, of North Lexington, Makes Heroic Attempt to Halt Runaway Horse-Effort Nearly Cost Him His Life.

Station Agent Charles H. Duffy, of

North Lexington, made a daring attempt to stop a runaway horse, last Saturday afternoon, and nearly lost his life in conequence. It was about 4.34 o'clock when the passenger train bound for Boston was due at the North Lexington station that a horse and a portion of a vehicle behind might have been seen running away on Bedford street in the direction of the railroad crossing. The signal of the approaching train had notified Mr. Duffy to lower the gates, and he had ione so before he saw the fast approaching steed. The horse maddened with fright either failed to see the gates or done so before he saw the fast approaching steed. The horse maddened with fright either failed to see the gates or too reckless to heed them, plunged ahead and snapped one of the bars like a pipe stem. It had the effect, however, to turn the animal on to the track just as the engine with cars attached rounded the bend above. In an instant Station Agent Duffy realized the situation, and thinking there was some one whose life was in danger, he jumped forward, seized the animal by the bridal and attempted to force him off of the track. His effort was successful, but in so doing he was thrown directly across the rails in front of the approaching train. Luckily there was a flag out for the train to stop, and the engineer was applying the brakes before he realized the situation. It required but a second, however, to see the precarious condition of the prostrate man, and the engine was brought to a sudden stop just in the nick of time. The space between the engine and Mr. Duffy was only a few feet. Mr. Duffy when he was thrown was practically stunned for an instant, although he turned his head to see the approach of the train just as the stop was made. It was not until then was he able to get upon his feet.

Had the train not been flagged he would have most certainly been killed, and as it was, much credit is due the engineer for his quick work. The frightened horse had run between an embankment and the train and was caught without difficulty and was later claimed by his driver. Station Agent Duffy said to an Enterprise man soon after the affair, in a very modest matter, that he hardly realized his danger until it was all over, but he thought there was a life to save, and jumped to the rescue. He was slightly bruised and jarred from the fall, but experienced no other inconvenience. Postmaster W. L. Burrill, who was an eye witness to the whole affair, said the act was one of the prace, and then saw Mr. Duffy jump. He says the gate was thrown across the track that no power could save him from a horrible death. Mr. Burri

MATERIAL WORTH.

The most of us are inclined to base our reckoning almost entirely on dollars and cents. The first question asked after the lifeless remains of the deceased friend have been laid away in their narrow home, is "what did he leave?" We invariably call that man poor who has no bank account. We all have a miserly desire to be generously remembered in the "wills" of those at the point of

This money consideration comes in to modify the higher interpretations of life. Upon the "almighty dollar," social life is largely based. We freely admit that money has its uses. A competency for home and family life is essential to all concerned. But it is a fundamental mistake when we allow the merely material to overshadow and eclipse the immaterial. Mind is superior to matter, and yet we too frequently reverse this decree of the infinite mind. To bring this subject of material worth closer home, we may be allowed to be more specific. That learned professor's wife in one of our New England colleges distinguished for her success in "match-making," well understood the way of the monied world when in reply to the query how her daughter came to marry a man old enough to be her father, said, "Well in the first place, my dear son-in-law is a millionaire, and then again he is a man of enviable social standing, and finally, my daughter loves him." It was only the other day that we learned through a friend that a man nearly fifty years of age is about to marry an attractive, sweet girl, nineteen years of age. individual in question is a man of affairs and has a pretty comfortable home to which to bring his young bride-to-be. But what an unnatural coming together. And all for a material home! We commit worse than highway robbery upon that higher inner life which we all possess when we sell ourselves for a money consideration. And yet we keep right on teaching our boys and girls that money, not wisdom, is the principal thing; therefore, get money. "What did he leave? is the first query and never "what did he take with him?" In spite of the fact that we must be housed and fed and clothed, still we need not fall down and worship the golden calf. That was a beautiful reply made the deformed man by his betrothed, when he released her from their engagement by reason of his ugly physical deformity through a terrible accident, when she said, "I will marry you so long as you have body enough left to hold that magnificent mind and soul of yours." Why isn't it possible to educate our children aright in all that belongs to our higher manhood and womanhood? "Is not the life more than meat, and the body more than raiment." The late venerable Dr. Lord, for so many years president of Dartmouth college, once said to a class graduating from under his instruction: "Young men, as you go out from your alma mater, don't be afraid to work, and to work hard; put your shoulders to the wheel; if thereby you turn the world upside down," and then ne added "for am sure it must be turned upside down before it is right side up." And we have come to believe that the learned doctor was a good deal right. We need to redefine true worth. We ought to estimate character and intellectual ability above a well filled purse. Corner lots and a swell front house can never make congenial two souls on a money basis; and those fathers and mothers who have marriageable daughters should this fundamental truth, "But Peter said unto him, thy money perish with thee,

because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

YOUR SENSITIVE PEOPLE. We mean by the above those who are forever getting stepped on. The man who is always insisting that his rights are invaded is the most uncomfortable of all God's creation. We don't like to come into his presence. He casts a shadow wherever he goes. He is a cloud which has no silver lining. He is a constant grumbler. Nothing goes to suit him. He dates everything from his own unpleasant experiences. He will run butt against a stone wail, and then "swear like a trooper" because the stone wall didn't get out of his way. These over sensitive people are intellectual and moral dyspeptics. The "sincere milk of the word" will in every instance sour on their stomachs. A good wholesome diet nauseates them. They would faint dead away were they to get a bit of fresh air. These sensitive assumptive people we most religiously hate. They are a nuisance wherever found, and we have never been able as yet to fully understand why God created them. We do not for a moment believe that He ever breathed into their nostrils the breath of a real life. They were born before their time, and never have taken on in this present life that growth they should have had in their ante-natal existence. But then, sensitive and misused as they are, they will continued kicking against the air, and everything considered we are more than willing that they should keep right on kicking with both feet. The only purpose they serve is that of increasing the count in taking the census.

HIS WINDOWS WIDE OPEN.

President Roosevelt is praying with his windows wide open towards Jerusalem, or rather, he is insisting that all applicants for executive favor shall do their praying with the windows of the big reception room of the white house wide open. The president is holding no starchamber interviews with those who desire official position or promotion. No whisperings with President Roosevelt will go as recommendations for public recognition. The president is getting very close to the people through his sensible way of doing things. The claim for litical preference must be made aloud to President Roosevelt. He has no se-crets which he desires to keep from the ple. He has already admitted the erican people into his confidence. as well de jure.

IDEAS FROM DREAMS

INVENTIONS THAT HAD THEIR BIRTH IN SLUMBERLAND.

The Design of the Whaleback Boat Appeared to Its Originator In a Dream - The Shot Tower and the Sewing Machine Needle.

Every one has heard of the whale back type of ships, first used on the American lakes and since adapted sucressfully to the transatlantic carrying

The inventor says the idea came to him while asleep. He dreamed that he was sailing in a small boat across an unknown and tempestuous sea when he became suddenly aware of the approach of what he at first took to be a marine monster, but which on closer examination proved to be a ship. It was, however, of a kind such as had never been seen by mortal eyes before. It looked very much like a huge cigar, and the dreamer noted that its deck curved upward toward the center and that there were practically no bulwarks, the result being that the water which broke aboard did no damage, but swirled off again almost immediately into the ocean whence it came. No living creature was apparently aboard the strange craft, but the glare from her furnaces could be plainly seen as she drove onward through the fast gathering gloom. The sleeper followed her with his eyes as long as he was able, and when she disappeared he cried out aloud: "Splendid! I will build such a ship as that myself some day!" In the morning he had forgotten entirely his strange vision of the previous night, but his wife, who had been lying awake by his side and had overheard his ejaculation, repeated it to him and questioned him concerning its meaning. Then, like a flash, the whole scene came back to him-the stormy sea, himself adrift in the open boat and the queer looking craft with the rounded deck and cigar shaped prow. Jumping up from the breakfast table, he flew to his study—he was an engineer's draftsman by profession—and ere evening dawned he had the plans drawn up for a ship designed in exact accord with the phantom vessel which had been evolved by a disordered imagination in the dead hours of the night.

Before Watts, the Bristol workman, dreamed the dream which has since become historical the making of shot was a slow, laborious and consequently costly process. Watts himself was a shotmaker, and he knew. He had first to take great bars of lead and pound them out into sheets of a thickness nearly equal to the diameter of the shots he desired to make. He then had to cut these sheets into little cubes, place the cubes in a re volving barrel and roll the barrel round and round until, by the constant friction, the edges were off from the little cubes and they became spheroids.

Watts had often racked his brain trying to discover some better and less costly scheme, but in vain. Finally, after spending an evening with some boon companions at an alehouse, he went home and to bed. He soon fell into a profound slumber, but the stimulants he had imbibed apparently disagreed with him, for his sleep was disturbed by unwelcome dreams. He imagined he was out again with the "boys" and that as they were stumbling homeward in the dark it began to rain shot. Beautiful globules of lead, polished and shining, fell in a torrent and compelled him and his bibulous companions to drag their heavy fimbs to a place of shelter.

In the morning when Watts arose he remembered his dream. He turned it over in his mind all day and wondered what shape molten lead would assume in falling through the air. These thoughts tormented him so persistently that at last, to set his mind at rest, he carried a ladleful of molten lead to the top of the tower of the Church of St. Mary, Redcliffe, and dropped it into the moat below. Descending, he took from the bottom of the shall low pool several handfuls of the most perfect shot he had ever seen. His fortune was made, for he had conceived the idea of the shot tower, which ever since has been the only means employed in the manufacture of the little missiles so important in sport. Even more weirdly romantic is the story of the invention of the sewing machine, or, rather, to be strictly exact, of the needle which made the machine a working possibility. The unhappy in-ventor had practically beggared himself before he discovered where the eye of the needle of a sewing machine should be placed. Naturally, in constructing his experimental working models, he followed the plan adopted for the ordinary needle and drilled the eye in the heel.

Never for an instant did it occur to him that it should be placed near the point. and, although he expended thousands of pounds and years of labor, he would probably have failed altogether in realizing his ideal if he had not one evening, after a toilsome and disappointing day in his workshop, visited a variety theater. Here he heard a song sung. very popular in its day, entitled "The King of the Cannibal Islands." On returning to his home he was haunted by the refrain. His unfinished model also troubled him. Small wonder, therefore, that on retiring to rest be dreamed that he was building a sewing machine for the king of the Cannibal islands; also he was perplexed about the position of the needle's eye, just as in his actual waking experience. He tried and tried, but the machine would not sew. At length the king got wild and gave the inventor twenty-four hours in which to complete his work. If the machine were not finished by then, death was to be the

He failed and as a result was ordered out for execution. As he walked between a file of soldiers he noticed that they carried spears that were pierced near the points, and instantly, like a flash, came to him the solution of the problem. While he was begging for an extension of time he awoke. It was 4 o'clock on a bitter cold winter's morning, but he jumped out of bed, flew to his workshop clad only in his nightshirt, and by 9 the first needle that had ever been forged with the eye at the point was lying before him. After that the rest was easy.-London Tit-Bits.

FINAL REPORT.

The final report of the reorganization trustees of John P. Squire & Co., and allied concerns has been issued to depositing creditors. It is as follows:

Boston, November 30, 1961.

To Depositing Creditors:—

We submit this, our final report upon the plan of reorganization instituted by us for the protection of your interests and for the preservation and continuance of the business of John P. Squire & Company.

Our investigation convinced us that the

Our investigation convinced us that the business should be reorganized upon a basis which would permit its prestige and its position in the business world to be restored.

The product of the company has always enjoyed so high a reputation both here and abroad that the good-will was of great value; and this has been preserved to the new company.

We thought it vitally important to creditors that the business should be carried on without interruption; and, to ment of creditors claims against the several assigning concerns, in accordance with the plan of the voting trustees thereinafter described. Until a dividend of at least four per cent per annum shall have been appropriated for the common stock, no sum in excess of $50,000 out of the profits of any one year shall be appropriated for the retirement of preferred stock. After the prefrred stock has been retired, the common stock will be entitled to all the earnings set aside for payment of dividends.

The new company includes all the former allied concerns which were conducted under various names, and it is the intention to have the branch houses known as John P. Squire & Company. Such branch houses are maintained in Boston, Portland, Maine, Augusta, Maine, Bath, Maine, Bangor, Maine, Manchester, N. H., Rutland, Vermont, Fitchburg, Mass., Lynn, Mass., Holyoke, Mass., Lowell, Mass., and Worcester, Mass.

Our experience of the business while in the hands of the assignee and since that time, under adverse conditions, has convinced us that, under normal conditions, the plant should earn handsomely. Practically all the claims of creditors are now in the control of the trustees, so that there are no remaining difficulties from that source to interfere with the completion of reorganization.

To protect your interests and to permit their growth under the terms of the amended declaration of trust, dated July 30, 1900, under which you deposited your claim, your trustees have deposited all the common stock of the company in a voting trust for the term of five years, and voting trust certificates will be issued to you at par for your claim as adjusted by the trustees. It is intended to list these certificates on the Boston Stock Exchange.

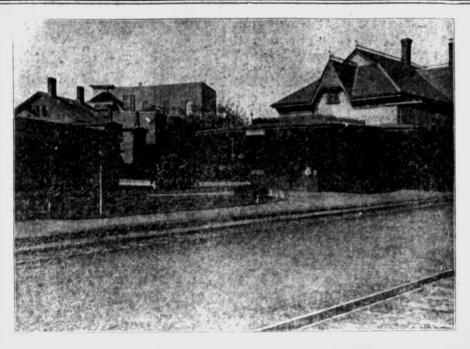

The voting trustes during the term of the voting trust will collect the dividends

NEW OLD PAPER

For sixty years the NEW YORK WEEKLY TRIB-UNE has been a national weekly newspaper, read almost entirely by farmers, and has enjoyed the confidence and support of the American people to a degree never attained by any similar publication.

is made absolutely for farmers and their families. The

we thought it vitally important to creditors that the business should be carried on without interruption; and, to this end, your trustees arranged from time to time for cash capital sufficient to keep the works in operation during the administration of the assignee, and until such time as the proceeds from the sale of its preferred stock would enable the new company to retire these loans. The trustees, as previously reported, purchased from the assignee all the assets in his possession, the packing house property and other real estate, taking over the business as a going concern.

After long controversy with the trustees under the will of the late John P. Squire, a clear title to the real estate has been acquired. A new company has been organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, and your trustees have turned over to it all the assets and business purchased from the assignee, as above stated.

The total authorized capital stock of the new company is $7,500,000, of which $6,000,000 are in common shares and $1,500,000 in preferred shares, all of the par value of $100 per share. The preferred stock has a prior liep on the assets of the company in the event of liquidation and bears cumulative dividends at the rate of six per cent per annum. It is subject to retirement at 105 and interest, from the date when the last dividend was payable. Provision has been made under the company's charter for the creation of a sinking fund for this purpose. The preferred shares are to be sold to provide working capital, and we are now turning our attention to this matter with the idea of offering the creditors the first opportunity to subscribe for the shares.

The common shares will be entitled to such dividends out of the surplus of accumulated profits of the company as the directors may from time to time declare. These shares are to be used for the payment of creditors claims against the several assigning concerns, in accordance with the plan of the voting trustees hereinafter described. Until a dividend is made absolutely for farmers and their families. The first number was issued November 7, 1901.

Every department of agricultural industry is covered by special contributors who are leaders in their respective lines, and the FRIBUNE FARMER will be in every sense a high class, up to date, live, enterprising agricultural paper, profusely illustrated with pictures of five stock, model farm buildings and homes, agricultural machine y, Stock Exchange.

The voting trustees during the term of the voting trust will collect the dividends on the common stock and distribute them to the holders of voting trust certificates upon the terms and conditions of such certificates.

In conclusion we would say that we are interested with yourself in the success of the new company; that we shall act for the equal benefit of all the stockholders; and that it will be our earnest endeavor so to manage its affairs that the ultimate results will be satisfactory to all concerned in the stock.

The preparation and approval of claims to be paid in trust certificates are now being attended to as rapidly as possible, and at an early date creditors will be invited to surrender the temporary receipts issued by the Old Colony Trust company and receive therefor the trust certificates.

BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPH SCREEN.

bum Is Out of Style-Another Gift That Will Hold Photographs-How

There is probably no better way of taking care of photographs than by putting them in an album, where they are protected from dust and unneces sary handling. Albums are out of fashion, however, and it is the custom to have dozens of photographs displayed about one's room. Every one of them cannot be framed, and there are countless ways devised of disposing them so that they will be visible and will yet not occupy too much room. The photograph screen is one of the best. It is a little screen which stands on the table and may be used as a lamp screen, and its manufacture will give occupation to the maker of homemade Christmas gifts. The one illustrated shows an attractive shape, but the form may be varied to suit individual taste. The screen consists of two leaves, which are fastened together with small hinges, but these may be added after the leaves are finished. The leaves themselves are of thin wood and are covered outside with stretched brocade, finished around the edge with gimp. The inside is also covered with stretched goods, but the material forms several horizontal plaits. It is in these plaits that the lower edge of the photographs is slip-

The disadvantage which often attends homemade Christmas presents is flimsiness. If a thing is made at home, it might yet be good of its kind and as strong and serviceable as if it were bought. Old postal cards, perhaps, or at best a piece of an old box in which goods have been sent from the dry goods shops.

The back of the photograph holder illustrated is of this sort of heavy pasteboard, or a thin piece of wood may even be substituted. The face is covered with antique brocade, which may be held by paste at the edges, and the back is lined with cambric. The front is divided into three parts. Across the lowest is a pocket of embroidered velvet, above which is fastened a tiny gilt hock, upon which a watch may be suspended. The other two divisions are arranged with flaps of the embroidered velvet, beneath which photographs may be tucked. The flaps and the front of the pocket are stretched over pasteboard of the proper shape and neatly lined. The top of the pocket, the divisions of the front and the entire edge are bordered with a flat gilt gimp. There is a bow of satin ribbon at each corner, and there is a ribbon loop across the top by which to hang toop across the top by which to hang the photograph holder.

An Ingenious Treatment by Which Drunkards are Being Cured Dally in Spite of Themselves.

No Noxious Doses. No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and understood that Drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. Sufferers may now cure themselves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonderful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. AGAIN WE ASK.

Again we ask, why does not the town of Arlington put such safeguards about Spy pond as to make tolerably sure the lives of those who may bathe in its waters, or who may skim its icy surface? The Enterprise had, some months ago, an editorial on this very subject of a safeguard about and on Spy pond. Three lives within the past six months have been sacrificed in the cruel waters of this pond. Every weak spot during the winter upon the ice of Spy pond should be properly flagged. Had this precaution been taken, the life of Hector Paquette, of Cambridge, would not have added on Sunday to the list of drowned. Arlington cannot rid herself of moral responsibility in so vital a matter. Let the town vote at the coming March meeting at least a thousand dollars, that Spy pond shall, during the entire year, be properly patrolled. Human life is worth saving.

THE WEATHER.

The weather is always an interesting theme for discussion, and especially so here in New England, and emphatically so in and about Boston. Hereabouts, there is more weather to the square inch than in any other locality far or "Probabilities" can get up a greater variety in his line of business in this latitude than can be found elsewhere. Last week was simply ideal in all that constitutes the weather, while on this Tuesday morning there is nothing in the weather calendar that is agreeable either in the heavens above or on the earth beneath. It is slush, slush everywhere. O, for a winter in the far north or down south! But then, this variety of weather has its compensation, for out of it comes the wise weather prophet, who can tell you all about the morrow. Let it rain or shine, let it blow high or low, his "I told you so" is always an enjoyable saying. But there is no use in grumbling about the weather, for we are all in for it alike, so we had better take it as it comes.

"THE NOW."

The now is the only moment of time that we can call our own. Yesterday has slipped from our grasp, while tomorrow may never come. And yet there are those who, so far as their business is concerned, act as though they had an unlimited bank account on time. With them, it is always tomorrow, and "Call again, when I will adjust this indebtedness." There are those who will forever persist in being late. The truth is, they were overdue at their birth, and we have little or no doubt they will be late when Gabriel blows his last trump. How impatient one gets with these "slow coaches!" They move so slowly that one hardly recognizes they move at all. They never think of "the now" with them it is always "tomorrow." That man who is always on time never fails to make a score. It is the prompt man who wins in the play of life. "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation" is as true in the material world as it is in the spiritual world. "Nothing is there to come, and nothing past, But an eternal now does always last.

CLEAR THE SIDEWALKS.

Thoroughly clear the sidewalks after every snow storm, and then the pedestrian will have comparatively dry footing when the rains come, and the slush is knee-deep elsewhere. We have before written of the necessity of cleaning the sidewalks of snow down to the solid payement, and we are sure this can be done by a moderate expenditure of muscle. As it now is, a bed of snow is left upon our sidewalks, so that, when the thaw comes on, we all have to wade, So we repeat, thoroughly clean the sidewalks after each snow storm. And then again, isn't it possible to have the street crossings in such shape that one will not be compelled to swim them after each rain or melting of the snow? We took a run about town on Tuesday morning under serious difficulties. With a pair of rubber boots, however, coming well up to the hips, we made out to reach the other side of the street-but the poor woman whom we met on her way to the electrics came to a standstill, doubting her ability to successfully stem the floods. We came to her rescue and gladly helped her over. But, seriously, the public crossing and sidewalks should be made passable in spite of storm and melting snows.

WHY IS IT?

Why is it that so many housewives will insist on having the curtains down in their sitting room and parlor? We had a line concerning this darkening of the room in last week's issue of the Enterprise, but the subject is of such vital importance that we now write of it editorially. The average intelligent man and woman ought to appreciate the fact that fresh air, pure drinking water, and the clear, bright sunshine colutely essential to health; and yet too many of us keep right on ignor-ing this fundamental law. There is many a home where, at this season of the year, people persist in having the curtains to their south windows down, thus substantially shutting out from their home the life-giving sunshine, and all this is done to save the carpets from fading. Practically no thought is given to the pale-faced children-they are allowed to wither and fade that the sitting room and parlor carpet may be saved. What stupidity! Why not be sensible, you mothers, and so flood your homes with the sunshine? It is but recently that in a family which literally lives in the sunshine, we noticed a little girl playing with the sunlight on the new carpet just laid down. Upon asking her what she was doing, she replied, "I am catching the sunshine." In that household to which we refer, the boys and girls all have rosy cheeks, but the carpets fade. We do not quite understand why the boards of health should not more or less frequently write for the public print the importance of giving full admission to the sunshine to our homes. "God said let there be light and there was light." So why pull the curtains down, and make of no effect God's eternal decree?

In many of our homes we find our-selves repeating the words of the poet, "The sunshine is a glorious truth; But yet I know, where'er I go, That there has passed away a glory from the earth."

PRACTICAL POLITICS.

We were asked the other day why we didn't write more frequently on "practical politics." Our reply was that our metropolitan papers are crammed with politics, so there is little necessity for the country or suburban journal to discuss this already threadbare subject. And yet the Enterprise is interested in political matters to that extent that it insists upon the best man for official position. The Enterprise is in nowise partisan. Its political creed is, "The greatest good to the greatest number." The children in our public schools should be taught the primary definition of 'politics." From a well-governed city he term has come to embrace the rule and management of an entire country or kingdom. We'll venture not one man in ten who in discussing the tariff understands primarily its definition. The subject of 'trusts' is but imperfectly understood, and yet, the average American voter will discuss in a declamatory way, any and all of these subjects. The difficulty is that we all talk and write too much politics, while we are profoundly ignorant of our subject. The boy in the primary school, even, will understand all about the term "tariff" when he is told hat Tarifa is an old town in the south of Spain, surrounded by old walls and towers, and has a strong fortress, and that during the Moorish rule all vessels passing through the Straits of Gibraltar were here at Tarifa compelled to pay duties. Hence our word "tariff." And so why not rightly define practical politics so that when we come to discuss the subject we shall understand what we are talking about? The most of the political writings in the public print is mere stuff-they give no valuable information, and simply for the reason that the writers have not first informed themselves. "Practical politics" are the alphabet of all good government, and this alphabet must be learned before one is capable of discussing intelligently the public political questions of the day. That paper merits little in its political editorial writings that simply copies from other journals the political rubbish found in their columns. Learn your esson, Mr. Journalist, before you atempt to instruct others thereon.

The Republicans in the city of Boston lost on Tuesday their grip on the municipal management. The board of alon and after January be composed of 10 Democrats and three Republicans, while the common council will be made up of 45 Democrats and 30 Republicans. There is likely to be made under the new order of affairs a clean sweep in the various brancnes of the city government. It is to be a new deal all around.

That Carnegie gift of $10,000,000 for a national university is a magnificent recognition of the scriptural truth that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," and that man is only the steward of the silver and the gold that may come into his possession. Mr. Carnegie deserves credit for doing with his money what it is his privilege and duty to do.

It looks more like the people's victory in Boston than that of the Democratic party alone. While Boston is a Democratic city, still the overwhelming ma jority that Patrick Collins, the mayorelect, received, points the fact that many a Republican must have voted for Mr. Collins. It is safe to predict a brilliant administration under Mayor Collins.

Col. Henry Watterson, of Kentucky made one of his brilliant and taking speeches on Tuesday evening, at the quarter centennial of the Boston Merchants' association. Marcus A. Hanna, the Ohio senator, was also present. Col. Watterson is one of the brightest men in the country.

AN HONEST EYE.

Has it ever occurred to you what a tell-tale feature is the human eye? It seldom or never fails to tell the story of the man. An honest eye will always look you in the face. We always suspect that man or woman who tries in every way possible to avert your gaze. An honest eye is the possession of only an honest man and an honest woman, Through the eye one may read the innermost thought of the soul. Without audible speech it has a language all its own, and one which cannot be misunderstood. The human eye is the poetical expression of the soul. It is all life, it is all joy, or it may become the saddest of messengers. One is not a little surprised as he discovers the number of men and women who while conversing will not look you straight in the eye. There are a few of these side-lookers in Arlington; you never can catch their eye-and why? is always our query.

Suppose you have a loss by fire which renders your dwelling untenantable.

Your building may be insured, but what happens to YOU while you are waiting to have it repaired? This applies to your own house as well as to one that you own and from which you receive rent.

In Either Case it Costs You the Rent. Did you know that for a very small cost you can insure the rental value of your real estate, no matter who occupies it?

Is it not a good business proposition? Do you know that every large owner of real estate avails himself of this form of protection? Many Lexington property owners are doing this. No matter who insures your buildings.

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

"A Royal Prisoner," which comes to the Grand Opera House next week, is a romantic comedy drama dealing with Russia during the reign of Elizabeth, in 1741. The plot is a novel one, told clearly. The period and locality of the play make it necessarily picturesque. The romantic element of the piece is constantly to the fore, while the generous vein of comedy is of the most brilliant and amusing kind. The scenic effects are magnificent; the costumes elaborate and beautiful. The cast is an all-star one headed by Susette Willey and True S. James. Edwin Felix, Frank Allen and Frances Desmond contribute brilliant work, and the others of the cast are fully competent. THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

SERENADERS SOAKED.

SERENADERS SOAKED.

Frank O. Nelson, the Lexington shoe dealer, has been laughing all the week every time he thought of the serenaders who tried to have fun with him a few nights ago. He had every reason to laugh for as he has been the victim of several practical jokes in the past, when he turned the tables on his would be tormentors, a laugh was timely. During the past few months when a certain combination of Lexington's humorists passed the shoe store of Mr. Nelson, during the midnight hours, they would stand in front of the door and render a few musical (?) selections for his benefit, or rather to arouse him from his slumbers. When they had sung themselves hoarse they would depart and for the next few days would ask Mr. Nelson how he enjoyed the midnight sonatas. The shoe man endured the ear splitting screeches with the patience of a saint, but upon the occasion in question he decided to have a little fun himself. Hearing the midnight sonated. He had not long to wait.

The crowd, which numbered ten, assembled as was their custom and waited. He had not long to wait.

The crowd, which numbered ten, assembled as was their custom and the quiet stillness was broken by a chorus of voices singing. "Oh, the buill dog on the bank." The first line of that beautiful song had hardly been rendered when the company thought they felt rain drops descending, but they kept right on, and started the second line, "and the builfrog in the pool." This was hardly finished, for the jokers found instead of one frog in the pool there were ten of them. The water from the hose had been getting a good start and before the serenaders could realize what had happened they were getting the water on all sides. A minute before the ten men were happy in their pranks, brilliant in their Sunday clothes, as though just emerging from a bandbox. A minute later there were ten undigained, water-soaked, disconcerted individuals running from the scene of the disaster, but followed only by the echoing jeers of their intended victim. And this is the reas

CHILDREN'S THEATRE.

CHILDREN'S THEATRE.

"Little Miss Muffet's Christmas Party" was given for the first time, Saturday, Dec. 7, at the Children's theatre, Huntington Chambers, 30 Huntington avenue, Boston, and its reception was a succession of enthusiastic outbursts from the audience. Encore after encore was demanded, and applause ran riot. The audience was about equally divided between children and "grown ups," and it would be hard to say which showed the greatest appreciation, Some of the comments of the Boston press are well worth consideration.

This is the second play that has been given by the Children's Theatre company, and in it the company surpassed all expectations. It has been a source of wonder to all how such a clever little body of actors and actresses could be gotten together, and it is safe to say there is not another company like it, even on the professional stage. Anybody who has seen it cannot but fall down in adoration. The play is so full of good things that it is hard to single out any particular feature as being better than the rest. Although all very simple and child-like, there are parts of it that are deserving of a place in many of the plays of today seen on the best stages. Performances of Miss Muffet will be given every Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 4 o'clock, and every Saturday at 230 o'clock, during the next four weeks. Then during Christmas week, matinees will be given on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of Christmas week at 2.30 o'clock. There will be no matinee Tuesday, Dec. 24.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE

The play selected by the mangeme of the Castle Square theatre for the coring week is "Jim the Penman," whi has not been seen here since its successful production by the Castle Squarempany four years ago. It was of the great productions of the old Ne York Union Square company, and has a ways held its popularity with the pulic on both sides the Atlantic since foriginal presentation. The cast give many of the players of the Castle Square company opportunities to display the abilities in unfamiliar lines and a capit performance may be confidently antice.

The Reason Why.

A commercial traveler had a cool reception from the other commercials staying at the same hotel. Somewhat puzzled, he asked the landlord to explain. Boniface hesitated a moment and then replied:

"Well, I hardly like to tell you, sir. Suppose I tell you a little tale instead. In this room a dog and a parrot were shut up one day. The parrot wanted some fun and yelled out 'Rats!' thus causing the dog to chase imaginary rodents. 'Rats!' screamed Polly a second time, but the dog did not move, so Polly hopped off the perch and when close to the dog again said 'Rats!' Then the dog had his turn, and Polly got back to her perch with a much disheveled plumage. Shaking ber head in a melancholy way, she plaintively murmured: 'Now I know what is the mat ter with me. I talk too much." "-London

Baron von Rachnitz was a member of the Baccanat club in the Rue Raymond de Toulouse of Paris. He was a somewhat remarkable man. A member of one of the great but impecunious families of been caught young and married by a brilliant complexioned, though not very rich, American girl. For a year or two they had been content to live in his dull native town, with its round of first rate operas, but third rate everything else. At the Anglo-American club the baron had evinced a certain aptitude for ecarte, poker and picquet? and so uniform had been his success at these games that it was not long before he began to yearn for fresh fields and pastures new, where he could play for higher stakes than were obtainable in a second rate German town and a third rate Anglo-American society. His wife, too, impressed by his success and not unwilling to realize larger returns, encouraged him in his ambition, with the result that a move was made to Paris, and he became a member of the famous Baccarat club.

On first becoming a member of the club he had confined himself to playing in the small hours of the morning. All the highest play was between 9 and 1 o'clock, and these hours he had first avoided on principle. After 1 o'clock he had noticed that play became slacker and that those players who still stayed on were either overexcited with wine or beginning to tire, and by 3 o'clock in the morning there were, as a rule, but a few jaded or half intoxicated members, fair game, he considered, for a young man of regular habits and who took a sufficiency of sleep.

Now, as he said to his wife, he was in Paris on business, and pleasure and convenience must give way to that, and she, being a practical young woman, cheerfully acquiesed. The consequence was that this enterprising young couple kept very curious hours indeed. They went to bed regularly at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and got up regularly at midnight. Von Rachnitz then dressed himself faultlessly in evening costume, kissed his dear little wife, who wished him good success, and turned into the club as fresh as paint. And this plan for some time succeeded excellently well. Indeed, the Frau Baronin, who was not quite as ambitious as her husband, was beginning to look forward to the retirement on a very fair competence in the near future. But this was by no means Von Rachnitz's idea. A comfortable competency did not appear half tempting enough to him. He swore in his heart that he would stick to business until he was a really wealthy man. His success was undoubtedly great with the comparatively small fry, but his practice in the small hours of the morning was only to be the prelude to greater things in the real gambling hours of the club. He only waited his opportunity to rake in, as he believed himself capable of doing, the thousands which changed hands before 1 o'clock in place of the hundreds which he gathered in all too slowly after that hour. In vain his wife used all her efforts to induce him to be content with the sufficiency he had already amassed. He paid her no heed, but bade her wait patiently and he would make her a rich

Thus it was that about three years before a certain Raoul Fleischer obtained membership in the club Von Rachnitz had become one of the 9 to 1 o'clock habitues. As in his earlier ventures, his luck from the first proved phenomenal. lice. In fact, the baron accorded his late and this was the more astonishing as adversary protection from personal viohere he was pitted against the finest and coolest players in the world. However, members of the club, who were appropriate the club, and the club, of course, bad fortune was sure to come at last-at least, so all the knowing ones

By this time Von Rachnitz had amassed a large sum of money, larger, indeed. than any of his associates imagined. He and his wife were living very smartly in a small way and were by degrees making good their position in the very best society. He was very popular with the leading members of the club, among whom was the cream of the male Parisian aristocracy. "My dear," said the baroness one day. "I wish you would give up play."

"I wish I could, my love. I would give it up tomorrow if I saw my way to do so. "I can't see what is to prevent you if you wish. It's simply tempting Providence to trust to your luck any longer." "You are perfectly right in what you say, but you must remember that the majority of the members of the Baccarat club don't look on gaming as a business, and if it was for a moment imagined that I played only for the money l make we should lose ground terribly in

"I don't see why." "You do not, and yet I've told you often enough that a man who has played successfully is always expected to go on giving his fellow members an opportunity for revenge. I should go down tremendously in their estimation if I suddenly stopped playing without assigning any reason. You don't know how suspicious people become of a man who gives up play before play gives him up. I don't see how I'm to abandon it altogether unless we make up our minds to leave Paris and settle elsewhere." 'Ah, but that's out of the question, just when we've got into society and all that. By the bye, we're invited to the Duc de Pincenez's."

"One of the very people, my love, who would never invite us again if I were to give up play suddenly and without good "Oh, well, then, I suppose it can't be helped." said the baroness, resigning herself, as she had often done before, to what seemed to be the inevitable. It was two days after this conversa-tion that Raoul Fleischer became a member of the club. He was a rude, overbearing, vulgar creature, egotistical and pushing to a degree; boastful about his superiority at games of skill, and exas-peratingly confident of his luck at games of chance No one appeared to know precisely where, he came from, although he bore letters from eminently respectable gentlemen, dated at different parts of the continent. Fleischer had not been a member of the club a week when it was suggested to Von Rachnitz that he should challenge this very objectionable person to a great bout at ecarte, in which, if his luck, which was by this time proverbial in the club, held good, M. Raoul Fleischer might be taught a lesson. "Well, baron," said the latter one night, addressing Von Rachnitz with a vulgar assumption of familiarity, "lucky, as usual, I suppose?"

"I don't know so much about luck, M Fleischer. I'm prepared to back my skill even against you. I'll play you a few games of ecarte, if you wish, though perhaps that's hardly your game, judging from the way you lost the big pool last night." "Ecarte not my game," replied Saxony, he had, some five years before, Fleischer indignantly. "I lost the pool last night, it is true, but the cards were against me; that was why. I made no mistake. I will, meinherr, play you, when you will, for what you will, a hundred games of ecarte, and we will see who is the better man, I or you."

"Very well," replied Von Rachnitz, "as you will. Tomorrow I will play you 100 games of ecarte for 1,000 francs apiece."

The following night the club was crowded. News of the match had spread abroad among the members, and men who had not been seen in the rooms for months were present. It was evident that the sympathics of the oplowers. "Very well," replied Von Rachnitz, "as that the sympathies of the onlookers were with the baron, who, although displaying admirable coolness and all his accustomed skill, lost steadily. Hand after hand was played, and Von Rachnitz invariably lost. What was most extraordinary about the contest was that Fleischer's success came to him in spite of the fact that his play was contrary to all canons of the game. He played "on authority" when he seemed to have hardly a decent card in his hand, and yet he won, and he "gave cards" when he held a good playing hand and invariably succeeded in bettering it.

Von Rachnitz's face became a study. He lifted his eyebrows from time to time in a surprised way, and clearly indicated in his features that he was puzzled. Absolutely irrational as was his game. He played "on authority" when zled. Absolutely irrational as was his opponent's play, the cards were invariably against the baron.

To many of the most expert players of the club who had crowded about the table it soon became evident that Fleischer must have some peculiar knowledge of the cards still left in the pack. Appar ently, however, until nine games had been played, all of which had been won by his opponent, the baron remained unconscious of any cheating. The tenth game was now in progress

Fleischer was "four up" and "marked" the king for the third time in succession. At that moment Von Rachnitz arose from the chair and in a voice of assumed calmness said: "These cards are marked. I demand an investigation."
The next instant he lifted a pack which lay at his side on the table and flung them into his opponent's face. exclaiming, "You are a scoundrel and a swindler!"

So palpable to many members of the club had been the cheating of M. Fleischer that a disposition was at once manifested by a number of those present to throw him into the street without further ceremony. To this course the baron objected and, apologizing for the scene he had created, begged that a full and rigid investigation of the charge of cheating be made at once and before any further violence was offered his opponent. The investigation was made on the spot, and the baron's charge was found to be abundantly substantiated. The cards were found to be of a most ingeniously marked variety and, as was ascertained, had been smuggled into the club by Fleischer with the connivance of one of the underservants.

It was at this point that the generosity of the baron asserted itself in refusing to accede to the wishes of several of his friends, who desired that the impostor should be turned over to the poto chastise him on the spot, and permitted the swindler to depart unharmed upon his assurance that he would leave

When the door had closed upon the discomfited Fleischer and those who had witnessed the episode had returned to the cardroom, the baron begged to be allowed to say a word publicly.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I am about to act out an impulse. Whether I am wise in doing so will perhaps be a source of dispute in the minds of my friends, but so irresistibly am I impelled to the course I am about to take I cannot, I do not dare, delay announcing my decision. need not tell you, gentlemen, that this episode has been to me a terrible shock. Never before have I seen cheating at cards, and never again, God willing, will I submit to such an experience. From this moment and in your presence I swear solemnly that neither in this club nor elsewhere will I touch a card again for the remainder of my life.

There were murmurs of surprise, mingled with slight applause, and it was admitted on all sides that the baron had conducted himself admirably.

Von Rachnitz is still a member of the Baccarat club, but he plays no more. He and his wife move in the very best society, and the baron has a reputation for rare cleverness and courage. No one, however, has as yet given him credit for having been clever and courageous enough to have imported into the Baccarat club the unfortunate Fleischer, who, for a consideration, had agreed to undergo all the contumely and risks attending the discovery of a cheat which were necessary to cover the baron's retreat from a systematic swindling of his fellow members probably unparalleled in the history of cards.

Line of Battle.

In the work of a Scotchman which was published in London in 1881 I find a statement full of zest. "The red and white stripes are not peculiar to the American flag," writes this gentleman. "A flag of similar design was for a long time a well known signal in the British navy, being that used for the red division to draw into line of battle." Straightway the mind forms a picture romantically indistinct of some gallant eighteenth century fleet, under a sky precisely like our own, at the moment-that still seems thrilling-when its full force is displayed and every life aboard is very gladly staked on the issue, whatever it may have been, at the signaling of the red and white stripes. "There," one says, "is precisely the emotion we have always felt without seeking to analyze it. Our flag means a great many things besides this, of course, but especially it signals, with that particular suggestion of large endeavor on the good sea, 'Line of bat-tle.' "—New York Heruld.

As Christmas approaches the one predominating thought is, "What can I make that will be an attractive present?' It is easy enough to choose ready manufactured things out of the shop, but there are some friends to whom one would prefer to give a bit of our own handiwork.

A little article which, however, answers a practical purpose while affording scope for the exercise of dainty needlework is a flat strip of silk, satin or cloth, made just the length and width of the piano keyboard, to lie upon the keys and protect them from dust when the piano is not in use. Of course the piano is kept closed, but even then dust and moisture will penetrate more or less.

The shield shown in the sketch is of cream satin, lined with wadded silk, or, better yet, with chamois, and finished at the edge by a silk cord. Upon the satin is a musical scroll design in silk embroidery, with floral wreaths surrounding it. Upon the scroll is embroidered part of the piano score of some piece of music, and in order to be appropriate it should be a real, readable score, not a haphazard collection of notes arranged ignorantly.

If the shield is to be given to a young married couple, the beginning of the wedding march, with garlands of orange blossoms, would be an appro- 15 cor. priate design. If it is preferred, a 46 cor.

cording to directions, because the cabinet must be strong, and feminine carpentering is usually not trustworthy.

First, a woman has not the necessary strength in her hands and arms; next, she has not the proper tools, and, last, she has not been taught the trade. It is desirable to make a sketch of the shape of the cabinet, give the desired dimensions and the thickness of the times; wood and let the carpenter put the framework together.

This may be enameled or stained, but it then challenges rivalry from bought cabinets which are finished in the same way, but by professionals. So the most successful amateur ones are those which are covered with stretched plush, brocade, cretonne or denim to match the room where they are to be hung.

The goods are cut in the proper form for the different parts of the framework and are then applied just as paper is pasted on the wall, except that the paste is put on the wood instead of on the goods. There should be a little glue in the paste, and the goods should be tacked at the edge to hold it in place until it is quite dry. The cabinet illustrated is covered with old flavored brocade, the edges being finished with gilt gimp held by ornamental nails.

LEXINGTON CHURCHES, SO- LEXINGTON ADVERTISERS. ONE ON THE DENTIST HARD TO GET A BOOK THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

HIS ADVERTISING SCHEME WORKED AN IRRITATING EXPERIENCE IN A LESSON XI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTER-A LITTLE TOO WELL.

It Brought Down Upon Him About the Coolest Customer He Ever Encountered and the Customer Got a Long Way the Best of It.

"I'm through with freak advertising." said the young dentist. "I've had my fling at trade secured through illegitimate tricks, and I've sworn off from further cultivation of the public in ways that are dark.

"It was about six months ago that I first resorted to irregular methods of securing patronage. Things were going fairly well with me then, but I made up my mind that I was entitled to still more business and in order to secure my just deserts availed myself of one of those idiotic advertising schemes. I wrote letters to total strangers whose names had been picked up haphazard out of directories and newspapers and inclosed bills for services rendered. These letters were all modeled on the same copy. In them I suavely expressed my hope that the cuspids and bicuspids of my unknown patrons had been in good condition since I last treated them, and I generously suggested that if they so desired I would be pleased to have them call and undergo a final dental examination as a guarantee of thorough satisfaction before the payment of the inclosed bills, which ranged from $25 to $50.

"Of course I never expected to get any money out of these bills. My object in sending them was to arouse curiosity among the fictitious debtors, who, having never even heard of me professionally or otherwise, would naturally be anxious to find out something about me and the strange circumstances of their unmerited bills. I had pursued this plan for about four months with tolerable success, when I sent out a bill and the stereotyped letter to a man who lived on West Twentythird street and may be called Whitman for the purpose of the story. His bill was for $25. That letter, like all the others, was only a stray shot fired at a very elusive target, and the chance of getting a reply was only one in a thousand. In that particular case the long shot won, and two days after mailing the letter I was honored with a call from Mr. Whitman. He had a decidely strenuous manner, and his opening remarks fairly swept me off my feet.

"'Hello, doc,' he said briskly. 'I got your letter yesterday, and I was mighty glad to see that you are disposed to be so accommodating about that work you did on my teeth last week. The fact is you did an infernally poor job. The plugs have all fallen out already, and you warranted them for ten years. That being the case, it's nothing more than common justice that you should fix me up again. I had intended to kick against paying your bill, but since you are willing to rectify your mistake, why, I'll give you another trial, and if you do all right the second trip I'll pay you the $25 without a

"I stared at Mr. Whitman in amazement. Quite certain was I that never before had I met the gentleman, and consequently I was positive that I had never plugged his teeth. On the impulse of the moment I said as much.

"'My dear sir,' I gasped, 'you must be mistaken in your dentist. I have no recollection of having done any work for you.'

"Mr. Whitman glared at me ferociously. 'Oh, ho,' he growled, 'so you are going to try to deny your butchery, are you? You're going to try to put it off on somebody else, are you? Well, sir, you can't do anything of the kind. Fortunately I've got your bill right here to prove that you and nobody else did it. If you didn't tinker with my teeth, you have no business to send me a bill for dental services. But you did send me a bill, and for $25, too, so you can't go back on your own work.'

"Without a doubt Mr. Whitman was the coolest customer I ever met. If he had not been quite so brazen, I think I should have had the audacity to insist that there was some mistake, and I should have trumped up some explanation that would have seemed half way plausible; but, as it was, his nerve far exceeded my own, and his high handed attack so thoroughly undid me that for the life of me I couldn't muster the courage to invent one single lie. He saw his advantage and followed it up boldly.

"'I'm ready for you to go to work right now,' he said, 'and I see that you have no patients waiting and can soon be ready too. We may as well get at it straight off. I always like to get a disagreeable job over with as soon as possi-

"As the gentleman delivered himself of this bit of wisdom be plumped himself down in the operating chair and opened his mouth to my inquiring gaze. The first look amazed me. I never saw such a set of teeth. Clearly somebody had been pegging away at them and quite recently, too, and the bungling the incompetent workman had been guilty of was frightful to contempuate. He had bored and filed and gouged recklessly, and the task Whitman had called upon me to do was to fill the cavities and otherwise repair the damage inflicted by my obstreperous predecessor. Whitman noted my expression of disgust

"'I'm not surprised that you feel like kicking yourself around the block,' he said. 'You certainly must admit that it is about the sorriest job ever inflicted on a man's mouth. Lord, I should think you'd lie awake nights, lambasted as you must be by your conscience for such diabolical butchery.'

"I suppose I could have denied the job even then and won out in my contention, but one glance at that infernal bill settled me, and I went to work. It took me six mortal hours to get Mr. Whitman's mouth into respectable shape. He fairly beamed upon me when the ordeal was over.

"You're the right kind of chap, after all,' he said. 'I guess you do know your business in spite of your first blunder. I don't know what was the matter with you the other day. You must have been rattled or something. Here, sir, is your $25.'

"Mr. Whitman laid down the money and clapped on his hat and was out of the office before I could say 'scat.' and I sat down and wept over the paltry sum I had received for a difficult piece of work that would have been cheap at $75."—

BOSTON LIBRARY. .

Rules For Lending to Unknown Borrowers Bothered the Stranger In Town, Who Feared He Was Doomed

to Serve a Term In Jail. "Well." said the reflective looking man, "I tried to get a book out of the Boston Public library once, and it honestly looked to me for awhile as if I was going to get jugged.

"I was up in Boston on a couple of months' business, and I took up my quarters at a boarding house in the Back Bay district. I had my evenings to myself, and as there in t much worth speaking of going on down town in Boston after dark I soon began to feel the need of reading material. I remembered the name of a certain book that had been recommended to me and tried to get it at the Boston bookstores. I couldn't get it. bowever, because it was out of print long ago. So one afternoon I hiked over to the Boston Public library to see if I couldn't get the book.

" 'Have you got such and such a book?" I asked the gloomy looking man at the library desk.

"'Yes, we have it,' said he suspiciously. "'Good,' said I. 'I'd like to read it.'
"'Um-you would, eh?' said the man behind the desk. 'Very well.'

"He got out a pile of blanks and handed me one of them to fill out. It contained about as many questions as a census schedule appertaining to the iron and steel industry. As a matter of fact the blank differed in no essential particular from the blank handed to applicants for civil service examinations. I had to give my name in full, age, habits, occupation, residence for the past fifteen or twenty years, state of my health and all that sort of rubbish, and it took me a good twenty minutes to digest that bunch of questions and fill in the answers. Then I pranced up to the desk with the filled up blank and patiently waited another twenty minutes for the solemn looking cuss to pay some attention to me. I handed in the carefully prepared blank to him. "'There you are,' said I cheerfully. 'I did the best I could with it. Now would you mind getting the book or sending for it for me, for I've got a lot of things to attend to before dark.'

"'Um-you don't get the book today, you know,' said the sulky looking chap behind the counter. 'Just leave this blank with me, and your case will be attended

"'But,' said I, 'don't you issue books to the public here, and if you don't what have I been spending all this time for filling out that blank? " 'You shall ascertain the reason later on,' said the man, with stern reproof in his tone. 'We shall perhaps be ready to issue the book to you some time tomorrow if you call around then.' "Well, I was so sore that I clomped out without saying anything more. It was all beyond me the way that library was run. and I determined to let the book slide and to forget all about that repository of printed knowledge as soon as possible. "I was sound asleep in my boarding house bed at 11 o'clock that night, and I guess everybody else in the house was in bed, too, when there came the most infernal ringing of the front door bell. The ringing was so angry and determined that I slid out of bed upon being awakened and went to the stair landing and rubbered down below to see what the trouble was. The landlady finally slipped on a bathrobe and went down to answer the bell. When she opened the door, my heart came into my mouth when I saw dimly in the doorway the huge form of a gigantic cop, and when he inquired of the landlady in a deep, gruff bass, 'Is there a man named Ta-ra-rum living here?' mentioning my name—say, wouldn't that have deterred you?—I fell into a tremor and bewas aware of, and yet there was a big cop inquiring for me, and there was a donjon keep staring me square in the

"'Yes,' replied the landlady, 'there is a Mr. Ta-ra-rum living here.' And I could see her freezing solid over the business. It was 10 to 1, I figured then, that she would conclude that I was a celebrated counterfeiter or confidence man or some sort of a crook that the police were after and that, even if I managed to evade arrest, she would order me out of her house in the middle of the night.

"'Oh, very well,' said the cop more mildly to the landlady; 'library, you know.' And then he executed a swift disappearance into the darkness.

"Now, I've always believed that the best way to meet trouble is to go right after it and give it a hug when it comes your way, and so I slipped on a bathrobe myself and went to meet the landlady as she came up stairs.

"'Madam,' said I, 'I overheard your colloquy at the door with that guardian of the law, and I heard my name men-tioned. I am not conscious of having violated the law in any respect, but I feel compelled in case you have conceived any suspicion of me to freely volunteer to give up my room here. You would be wholly mistaken in supposing that you were harboring a criminal, yet I dislike to put you to any inconvenience.

"Then the landlady held on the banniscontrol her voice sufficiently to tell me that I was simply a victim of the Boston Public library's method of investigating its applicants for reading material. Every night the library issued to the police department, she said, the filled in blanks of those who applied during the day for books, and these blanks were sorted over and given out to the cops on the various beats. It was a part of the duty of the policemen to ring up the addresses given by the applicants for books and thus to ascertain if they actually lived at the ad-dresses they gave. And it was this that came so near to giving me the heart disease finish. I never went back to the Boston Public library after that book; was afraid they might man handle me and lock me up in the coal cellar and never let me out again in this life."-Washington Star.

NATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 15.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. xii, 1-17. Memory Verses, 12-14-Golden Text, I Cor. v, 7-Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.] 1, 2. "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months. It shall be the first month of the year to you." Thus spake the Lord to Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt in connection with the feast of the Passover. It was the month Abib and the seventh month of their civil year, but became from this time the first month of their sacred year. It was the national redemption month and the beginning of their existence as a redeem-ed people unto God. So with every redeemed soul, the time of its new birth is to it the beginning of days, the time be-fore that being lost, for it is only he that hath the Son who hath life (I John v, 12). We begin to live only when we come under the shelter of that precious blood.

3, 4. "Every man, according to his eating, shall make your count for the lamb." A lamb was to be chosen on the tenth day of that first month, a lamb for each house unless the household should provetoo little to eat the lamb; then the next neighbor was to be included as far as necessary, that each lamb might be eaten. When they gathered the manna for their daily food, they did so on the same principle-"every man according to his eating, some more, some less" (Ex. xvi, 16, 17). While redemption is by the blood of the Lamb, it is all important to abundance of life to eat the Lamb, for He Himself said, "He that eateth Me even he shall live by Me" (John vi, 57). 5, 6. "Your lamb shall be without blemish." The physical perfection of the animal was typical of the absolute perfection of the antitype, the Lamb of God, our Passover (I Cor. v, 7). Compare Lev. xxii, 19-21; Deut. xvii, 1; also Num. xix, 2, concerning the sacrifice of the red heifer without spot and without blemish, all typical of Him who was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners-the Lamb of God without blemish and without spot (Heb. vii, 26; I Pet. i, 19). The male indicates the perfect strength of the sacrifice, There was noweakness in Him, and even when He died He cried with a loud voice. He gave His life, for He said, "No one taketh it from Me" (John x, 18). The four days that they kept the lamb is suggestive of the 4,000 years from the promise of the Redeemer until He was offered a sacrifice for our sins (Gen. iii, 15; I Pet. i, 20;

II Pet. iii, 8). 7-10. "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread, and with bitter herbs they shall eat it." The blood being sprinkled on the two side posts and on the upper doorpost, they were then to dispose of the whole lamb, burning with fire that which they could not eat. Consuming by fire was God's way of accepting, so God and they ate the lamb together. The roast-ing with fire indicated the sufferings of Christ by which He was prepared to be-our life. The unleavened bread signifies that we must put away all evil in order to feed upon Him, for leaven is always a. symbol of evil. The bitter herbs teach us that we must be willing to suffer with Him, for it is given unto us so to do

(Phil. i, 29; iii, 10).

11-13. "When I see the blood, I will pass over you." This was the great direction of the control of t sprinkled with the blood of the Passover lamb, and some were not, and wherever there was no blood there was death-the death of the firstborn. But where there had already been death-the death of the lamb-there was no death of the firstborn. "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul," and "without gan to wonder what I'd been doing, any-how, to get the law after me. I hadn't been up to any criminal devilment that I blood, and the redeemed in glory sing, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood" (Eph. i, 7; Rev. v, 9). The firstborn in every house where the blood was sprinkled was perfectly safe, whether they felt quiet about it or not, for safety: does not depend upon assurance; but, heing safe, assurance is our privilege, and peace and joy will be ours if we only believe God (Rom. xv, 13). They ate with loins girded, shoes on and staff in hand, ready to depart. So we are taught to be ever ready for our exodus.

14, 15. "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread." Compare with these two verses verses 18-20 and note the repetition of the statement that whoev should eat anything leavened would be cut off from Israel. In Lev. ii, 11, leaven was forbidden to be offered with any sacrifice, and in the teaching of our Lord Jesus He repeatedly warned the disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees and of Herod. In the passage where Christ is called "Our Passover" we are exhorted to keep the feast, not with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth (I Cor. v, 7, 8). In Lev. vii, 13, and xxiii, 17, there is a command to offer leaven, but in each case it was to represent the evil that was in the offerer. The first was a thanksgiving offering and is explained by Amos iv, 5—"Offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, for this liketh you." The other was typical of the evil that found ters and laughed loud and long. It was about ten minutes before she was able to Pentecost. The passage that is most misunderstood and perverted concerning leaven is Math. xiii, 33, which is gener ally taken to mean that the gospel will gradually fill the world, whereas in the light of the whole discourse in that chapter it plainly teaches that in this ageof the mystery of the kingdom (verse 112) the woman (the church) will corrupt her food till all shall be corrupted. See II

Tim. iii, 1-5; iv, 3, 4, as a comment.

16, 17. "No manner of work shall be done in them." This and similar statements concerning the feasts of the Lord and the holy days of Israel seem to me to have their spiritual application set forth in Heb. iv, 10, with Eph. ii, 8, 9; Rom. iv, 5; Phil ii, 13, and similar passages. The redemption of Israel was wholly of God, as also is our redemption. His work, not ours, gives peace. So also the daily life must be wholly of God. As we get the Lamb appropriate Christ. we eat the Lamb, appropriate Christ and all that is His more fully day by day. He will work in us both to will and to do of what was once a mass of living forms. This deposit has been examined to the depth of more than a hundred feet and extends over an area of more than two miles in diameter. Every cubic inch of this deposit contains the skeletons of 10,000,000 of tiny forms.

He will work in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure, working in us that which is well pleasing in His sight, and whatever He may accomplish through us we shall gladly confess that it has been "not I, but Christ," "not I, but the grace of God" (Gal. ii, 20; I Cor. xv, 10). God is seeking earthen vessels in which He may work unhindered all His pleasure. If we are only willing and yielded, He will do it.

BIJOU OPERA HOUSE.

BIJOU OPERA HOUSE.

There has been a double bill at the Bijou Opera house, this week, with "The Pirates of Penzance," and "Cavalliria Rusticana" as the attractions. It has been quite an achievement for the organization to present at each prformance such widely differing works, yet it must be admitted there was much excellence in both. In the Gilbert & Sullivan's piece, the company appeared better than ever before, and the many spirted numbers were well received. James Gilbert was the major-general, and played the part with much unction—not exaggeration. part with much unction—not exaggerated, but at the same time full of legitimate comedy. Frances Knight again demonstrated that she possesses a sweet soprano voice. George Shields made a fine pirate chief. Bowman Raiston made a comerchat crotesque police sergeant, and fine pirate chief. Bowman Ralston made a somewhat grotesque police sergeant, and Bessie Fairbairn was very acceptable as Ruth. "Cavalliria" was cast with Clara Lane as Santrizza, J. K. Murray as Alfio, Hattje Belle Ladd as Lolo, and George Tallman as Turiddu. Both Miss Lane and Mr. Murray sang with much fervor. He was superintendent of the divisions of machinery, agricultural implements, transportation, graphic arts and ordinance. Mr. Moore gives in evidence not only had the jurors on the division of machinery been appointed without his consent contrary to the printed vision of machinery been appointed without his consent contrary to the printed rules of the exposition, but that the awards had not been deposited with him by the date specified in the rules that this should be done. Mr. Wood advertised the exposition, and secured from the best firms the best possible exhibits Mr. Moore stated in court that he remembers various interviews with Mr. Wood, and that he, Mr. Wood, had objected to the space allotted him in the machinery building as being too small, and having a narrow and undesirable frontage. Mr. Wood said to Mr. Moore that he would be at a disadvantage with the public and with the jury of awards in such inadequate space.

that he would be at a disadvantage with the public and with the jury of awards, in such inadequate space.

William E. Wood was called to the stand and testified in his own behalf. He told at length of his negotiations to secure suitable space in the machinery building, which, he claimed, he was unable to do. Mr. Moore had said that it was poor space, but that he, Mr. Moore had power in the formation of the jury, under the rules which had then been made, but not published, as to ensure that full justice would be done. The points claimed by Mr. Wood are substantially these: That he had not sufficient space for his exhibit to be seen at the best advantages, and that the jury of There is already a national interest in awards was not entirely unprejudiced, this case, for should Mr. Wood win, it will call in question all of the awards made at the exposition.

Thursday the exposition company decided to give the gold medal to L. & I. J. White Co., to cover their exhibit of ship carpenters', coopers' and butchers' tools, with ice tools left out. This is a point in favor of the Wood company.

TWO HANDSOME ANGORAS.

It does not take very much of a con-cisseur in cats to tell that the two which have recently come into the possession of G. C. Grffith, Harvard, 1900, now liv-ing in Boston, are beauties in every sense of the word. Even those who do not as a general thing care for the feline race cannot help admiring such animals as these. They stand unquestionably far ahead of any cats in Boston and it is doubtful if their equal can be found in doubtful if their equal can be found in the country.

The breeding of a good cat, hardy and beautiful, with firm silky fir, is a task whose difficulty is not generally appreciated. The long-haired cats are of three classes, the shag, the coon and the Angora, Each possesses certain peculiar merits of its own, and it is from a blend of their several good points that the best results are obtained. Mr. Griffith has always been an admirer of cat beauty and has often expressed this admiration, so a friend in Maine sent him from a nursery in that state the animals described has often expressed this admiration, so a friend in Maine sent him from a nursery in that state the animals described below. They were selected as the best obtainable and the friend in his letter praisd their beauty to the utmost.

The male cat is known as "Jack." He is a cross between a coon and a Persian Angora, the Angora predominating. In color he is a beautiful tiger. His face and head are particularly striking, especially the head, which is superby shaped and proportioned The fur is exceptionally long and silky, presenting when ruffled, a fluffy appearance, which is wonderful to behold. He will be one year old Jan. 12, and only four weeks after birth he sold for $25. He is likewise the winner of two first prizes in cat shows. The cross breeding is such that he is especially hardy and not at all delicate as are most Angoras.

But however fine a specimen the male is, the female is much the more valuable cat. Many stories and superstitions are prevalent about the traditional "black cat." but that animal is rarely seen.

cat. Many stories and superstitions are prevalent about the traditional "black cat," but that animal is rarely seen. There are very, very few black cats on whom a dilivent search would not bring to light a white hair. And herein is the peculiar value and rarity of "Laura D," as the female is called. She is black in every hair, and a superb, glossy black that shines if rubbed smooth. Ont the hair is so long and soft that it rarely is smooth. The tail is noticeably handsome, resembling nothing so much as a string of puff balls. This cat is a Persian Angora, with a considerable strain of shag, and will be only five months old Dec. 20. The coat is of exceptional quality and the fur, though long now, has yet several months to grow.

It may well be imagined that Mr. Griffith guards this splendid pair of animals with the greatest care. Cats of such quality are se highly prized that many would travel across a whole state to steal them. But he does not expect to keep them long in the city as he is to return to his Virginia home for the holidads and intends to present them to his mother for a Christmas present. Few in the United States will receive a Christmas gift of such rarity and value.

PARK THEATRE.

"Fiddle-Dee-Dee," the merry musical comedy which has been the reigning attraction at the Park theatre for two weeks, enters upon its third and last week next Monday. Pretty girls in large numbers funny comedians and clever singers and dancers have served to make this show a success, and, as something new is introduced at nearly every performance, one is sure of seeing something a little different every time he visits the theatre.

During the coming week new specialties will be introduced by Joseph Howard, Ida Emerson, Laura Comstock, Bobby Harris, the Americus Quintet, and Jake Barnard, while new features in the way of songs and dances will be added. Mr. Howard will continue to sing "Who's Your Friend," the song that has made the biggest musical hit of the season, and new verses will be added to the song. Performances will be given every evening and on Saturday afternoon.
